WE AGAIN HEAR ENTHUSIASTIC BAND PRACTICE

More Evidence We Have Good Material Here For Municipal Band

On Tuesday evening of this week the band which has been functioning here for some time held two hours of practice at the Daly City Auditorium.

All that is necessary to convince any one that the members are competent musicians is to go to the hall and listen to them playing various selections.

The boys have now been practicing sincerely for a number of years and are entitled to the support of our citizens in raising funds to purchase uniforms. When properly equipped they will be able to accept invitations which they frequently receive to play at public functions in San Francisco and elsewhere. This will result in considerable favorable publicity for Daly City in other parts of California.

Every citizen who has an interest in its welfare and has pride in our community should make every effort to assist in raising funds to uniform the members of the band. By so doing you will help advance the interests of Daly City through valuable advertising which will result from the activities of our municipal band.

Other cities are securing much publicity through this same source and we should not lag behind here in taking advantage of the opportunity thus offered.

Turn out to hear the boys play on Tuesday evenings and lend our band a helping handl in every way you possibly can.

These efforts will pay large dividends in building up your community.

Analyst Finds Country Had About Two Days To Live At Time of Change

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

The "weepers" were quite plentiful at the recent convention of the American Mining Congress, Western Division, but a welcome relief came when such men as United States Senator Key Pittman and Dr. John Wellington Finch took the floor. Unprejudiced thinking at its best was indulged in by the forthright students of our economic situation and they spoke right from the heart.

Senator Pittman had a ready reply to the mining men who were claiming that President Roosevelt's New Deal is not hitting on all cylinders as far as the mining industry is concerned. The Nevada statesman said:

"I can appreciate President Roosevelt's efforts because I know what he faced. Suppose the New Deal is only a 'shot in the arm'—not admitting for a moment that it is? That 'shot in the arm' has kept us going for two years. This country had about two days to live when Franklin D. Roosevelt took office.

"The President is proceeding cautiously. He has the power to inflate. He could have this country in the midst of a boom right now. But he knows that kind of a boom would have its reaction.

"There is no danger to-day of your bank going under. That is something to be thankful for. Farmers in the Middle West are not taking judges out and putting ropes around their necks on account of mortgage foreclosures. Could it be because farm mortgages are not being foreclosed?

"It is pretty hard to find the right answer to all our questions. BUT I KNOW THAT THE PATIENT IS ALIVE AND MOVING AHEAD."

Dr. Finch is director of the Bureau of Mines and speaking from the fountain head denied the truth of the assertion of some delegates to the convention that the Federal Government is neglecting mining. He said that the most exhaustive survey yet made of the mining industry, intended to help the industry help itself, is being made by the Bureau of Mines, the Department of Commerce, and the Geological Survey. He said:

"It is the administration's feeling that the gold industry has been started on the road to recovery, and now can take care of itself to a large degree. The boost in the prive of silver will help the industry to some extent. Now we are tackling the heaviest problem—what to do for the lead, copper, zinc, coal and non-metal mineral producers.

"WE FIND THE MINING INDUSTRY KNOWS COMPARATIVELY LITTLE ABOUT ITSELF. To-day it is unable to take advantage of the New Deal because concerted action is lacking.

"The studies being made by the three Federal agencies will give mining operators something definate to work on. We are correlating production and consumption. We are trying to figure out new markets.

"In a short time we hope to have ready for distribution literature that will help the small gold producer. This will be of particular interest to California, where a large percentage of the gold production comes from small mines."

Help for the little fellow, something I have been fighting for in this column for nearly two years, is promised by Harry L. Hopkins. in a letter to Congressman James Scrugham of Nevada. Hopkins is Federal Emergency Relief Administrator.

The Washington man says it is perfectly ali right to use direct relief funds in special cases on the recommendation of local administrators for providing grubstakes, either for placer mining or prospecting within a specified county.

Along the line I have suggested all along for the relief of unemployment among sturdy youth and middle-aged men, the Federal Goverment representative must be satisfied that the grubstaking will be of definate aid in the rehabilitation of the person grubstaked.

OUR DALY CITY MERCHANTS IN MONTHLY MEET

Invites All Professional and Business People Of City To Become Members

The regular monthly meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association was held at the City Hall Wednesday evening of this week.

The first thing on the program was the settling of account concerning the annual picnic. The expenses of this affair ran up into quite a sum of money, but there was sufficient income to meet all bills.

Nomination of officers to serve for the ensuing year was next in order. The following members were nominated: For President, Fred Mather; Vice President, W. E. Pitschke; Recording Secretary, W. H. Clay; Financial Secretary, Andrew Vireno; Sergeant at Arms, G. Bertoli. The election will take place at the regular meeting in November. As nomination is virtually equivalent to election, the above named undoubtedly will be the officers for the coming year.

There was a lively discussion over the matter of adopting a motion to approve a municipal band. After all had aired their views, the association went on record as endorsing the proposition, as it was believed it would result in considerable advertising for Daly City.

A committee was appointed to devise some means to improve the present condition of the automobile, garage and repair business in the city. This committee is composed of Members Cooper, Peterson and Mather.

The association will take up the problems of those engaged in the automotive industry here at the next meeting, and all engaged in this business are invited to attend on Wednesday evening, November 7 at the city hall council chamber and help solve these problems.

Every business and professional man and woman in Daly City and Colma should join the association. Come in and help the rest of your public spirited citizens in building up your community. Remember, you only prosper in proportion to the prosperity of the citizens. Show your public spirit by becoming a member of the association and then attend regularly and assist in making its activities successful.

MAN KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

An automobile accident caused the death, last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, of Charles Baker, 82 years of age, of 323 San Mateo avenue, Daly City.

Baker was struck by an automobile and fatally injured. He was removed to the Villa Sanitarium in Company No. 1 First Aid Truck, where he died immediately after arrival.

The accident occurred at Hillcrest drive and Santa Barbara avenue as the dead man was crossing the intersection.

Philip P. Christian of Santa Barbara avenue, a letter carrier, the man driving the car which struck Baker,, after questioning, was released by local police on his own recognizance.

Henry Petzold of Rhyne street, a foster brother of the dead man, is his only surviving relative. Deceased had been a resident of this community for the past fourteen years.

The funeral was conducted, Tuesday afternoon of this week, from the mortuary chapel of Lasswell & Co. at 2 o'clock. Interment was in Cypress Lawn cemetery.

An inquest was held at the W. C. Lesswell mortuary by Dr. J. C. McGovern Monday of this week. The findings were that deceased stepped from the curb in front of his home into the path of the auto which struck and killed him and that death was accidental; due to a fractured skull and brain and internal injuries.

Proposed New Vista Grande School

Technicality Causes Change Of Time For Voting To Friday, November 2

At the meeting on Tuesday evening of this week to further the adoption of the bond issue for new schools it was announced that postponement of the date of the election was necessary. President G. R. Augustien of the Board of Trustees of the Jefferson School District, stated that, owing to an error appearing in the published Notice of Election the District Attorney's office had ruled the election could not be held on the original date, Friday, October 5.

It was explained that publication of the corrected notice could not be completed until four weeks have elapsed after the first publication, and for that reason the election has been postponed until Friday, November 2, four weeks from today, instead of on the original date.

Hand bills notifying the voters of the district of the change in the date of election have been distributed in order that as little confusion as possible might result from the setting ahead of the date.

We believe every citizen should go to work with redoubled vigor to put the bonds "over the top" on the new date—FRIDAY, NOVEMBER TWO.

The Bond Booster meetings will be continued and will be held every Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock at the Woodrow Wilson School in the Manual Arts Building.

Several earthquakes felt here Tuesday should spur all to exert every effort to have the bond issue passed so as to provide safe buildings for our children, as the old schools are in a precarious state to withstand any severe shake in the future.

A drawing of the proposed new Crocker School has been placed in the Well Baby Clinic room of the P. T. A. in the Daly City Theater building.

came separated from them somewhere along the route.

Daniel Moriarty, a cousin of the dead man, was located at the Whitcomb Hotel and told the police that a sister of the deceased resided in San Francisco.

Moriarty was a native of Parish of Moore, Dingle, County Kerry, Ireland.

The funeral was conducted from a San Francisco undertaking establishment.

The only clue to the car which hit Moriarty was given the local police by Jack O'Brien and a man named Boyd, a salesman for Belli & Co. of Colma. O'Brien said he and Boyd saw a large black sedan hit Moriarty. They did not obtain the license number. Oliver Grannucci of Colma, who was passing about the time Moriarty was found unconscious, said he saw a car parked about ninety feet from the scene of the accident. He said a woman was seated in the car and a man was wiping off one of the fenders with a rag.

Local police are working on these clues at this writing.

FRED E. BEER OPENS EARLY CAMPAIGN

Launching his campaign for election as supervisor from the Second District at the general election November 6, Fred E. Beer, San Mateo, today began a new tour of the county, renewing contacts made in his primary campaign.

In the primary, Beer polled an amazing total over the other three candidates in the race, and fell short less than 600 votes of being elected at that time. Today his supporters expressed confidence that he will poll a record vote in November to win the supervisorial seat.

"Launching my campaign for ballots in the general election" Beer said today, "I am advocating the same principles as I did in the primary. I am running independently, and I am pledged to no interests except those of the people. I solicit the support of the county electorate, believing, through experience in public life and a thorough knowledge of conditions in this county, I can be of real service on the Board of Supervisors."

Beer has again established headquarters in San Mateo, and from this office an active committee of supporters is aiding him with his campaign. Plans are being mapped for an intensive drive extending into every part of the county and contacts with people in every section.

In an analytical statement from Beer headquarters, it is pointed out that the primary vote clearly expressed a desire for a change in the Second District's supervisorial representation. The statement says further: "The strong vote given to Fred E. Beer in the primary is an impressive indication of the electorate's desire for new representation from this district on the county board. With this in view supporters of Beer are re-launching his campaign with firm confidence that his candidacy has the approval of the people, and that he will be elected in November.

BANK BUILDING IS BEING REMODELED

Work will begin immediately on redecorating and painting the Bank of America Building at Mission and San Jose Avenue, Carl E. Newman, Manager of the Daly City Branch, announced today.

"The building housing the Bank of America Daly City Branch is to be completely painted on all sides of the exterior and a new composition roof is to be laid," said Newman.

"Interior walls will be treated in a three tone color stone effect an all joints will be relined. The ceiling will have stencils in the soffit of the cornice and beams. All woodwork of the bank fixture will be refinished."

Other work contemplated will be the installation of new shades, linoleum repairs, repairs to the heating system and the painting of new bank signs on the windows.

"The repairs and improvements to the bank building are particularly timely at present," said Newman, "For they are similar to the type of work the government is trying to stimulate through the Federal Housing Program, in which our institution is actively co-operating by making loans for the repairing the modernizing of homes, business properties and farm buildings."

HETCH HETCHY CELEBBRATION

As the date for the official completion of the Hetch Hetchy water system draws near, San Franciscans are again wrinkling their foreheads over the meaning of those two oddly alliterative words—"Hetch Hetchy."

Waters from the Hetch Hetchy system will pour into a city reservoir on October 28, when thousands of citizens are expected to gather at the south end of the Crystal Springs Reservoir Lake in San Mateo County for the celebration. Headed by the Honorable Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, federal, state and city officials will participate in the exercises.

Hetch Hetchy, actually, is the name originally given by the Indians to a small region high in the Sierra Nevadas. It is a gouge of solid granite at an elevation of 3,500 fet. Geologists lay the unusual formation to glacial action or the action of falling waters or both. How long it took to form or what processes caused the differentiation of this canyon from thousands of others is problematical.

The Hetch Hetchy caynon differs from others in the Sierras in two respects important to its present function as a massive reservoir for the water supply system: one, the floor of the canyon is level; and two, its outlet is a narrow gorge cut down sharply into the solid granite for hundreds of feet.

Indian lore, responsible for the name "Hetch Hetchy," has been lost. The Indians have disappeared. Conjectures as to its meaning have suggested the grasses, the winds, or the stately pines standing like sentinels on either side of the narrow end of the valley.

William J. Bryan once humorously remarked that perhaps the name referred to some sort of Indian war dance.

Today the strangely named canyon is a massive reservoir storing 67,000,000,000 gallons of water, with the O'Shaghnessy Dam built to its present height. The ultimate storage, with the dam built to its full height, will be 116,000,000,000 gallons.

Young Brock was the son of Deputy Sheriff Brock of Alameda County.

Miller said he could not explain the accident, except for the fact that he had fallen asleep while driving. He was awakened by the crash and found his car had struck a telegraph pole at the side of the highway and that he had been driving on the wrong side of the road.

State Traffic Officer Atto Schramm was assisted by Mrs. L. D. Pepper, deputy county coroner, in conducting the investigation.

"Regimented" Propaganda Is Modern Idea.

Established Order Bolstered by Intellectuals.

No conscientious student of letters has been inclined to take too seriously the alarm that has been felt over the future of literature in Russia's proletarian state. After all, it was only a natural part of the revolution that the intellectuals should have been "regimented" for propaganda purposes.

History shows that it is the part of the intellectuals during stability to support the established order and when that order becomes insupportable to express, in varying ways, the intellectual ferment that precedes all fundamental shifts in political power. Thus the writers in Russia long ago became revolutionary propagandists. And when the revolution came they extolled the new regime more blatantly, but not less effectively, than the writers in a capitalistic state bend their art toward support of the homely virtues whence capitalism draws its strength.

Writers know this. Somerset Maugham, in the preface to "East and West," takes pains to inform his readers that the editor of the magazine where his stories mostly appeared never told him what to write or what not to write. If it were not at least suspected that writers are "regimented" under whatever political system, such declarations of independence would be superfluous. But there are degrees of regimentation, as of everything else. During a revolution the subtle concealment of propaganda under a layer of art disappears and the skilled writer becomes as unscrupulous as any hack publicity agent. That is what happened in Russia, when, in the phrase of Max Eastman, the artists were put in uniform.

The Russian revolution is now an accomplished fact. The need for obvious propaganda lessens. The diehards may still believe that there is an unlimited distinction between true proletarian writers and bourgeois intellectuals. But Karl Radek, one of Communism's most powerful thinkers, realizes that undiluted propaganda may eventually defeat its own ends. At a congress of all-Soviet writers in Moscow, Radek said that the bars must be let down and that the old theory of "he who is not with us is against us" would no longer rule in the arts.

And so it may soon be that the writers of Russia will lay aside their uniforms and the Russian artists in mufti will find new means for expression. Out of the chaos of revolution may appear the needed security which is the basis of all art. At the same time it may be well to speculate on the theory that the reason why literature has so lagged in the 300 years of America is because of its "regimentation" under such banners as Puritanism and Materialism. The growing determination of our writers to work under different standards and to talk openly of the place of propaganda in art is as significant as Radek's movement in the opposite direction.—Washington Post.

Sea Collisions Minimized

The danger of collisions at sea on foggy nights can now be minimized by a new invention which shows—with luminous spots and arrows on a compass-marked screen—the location and direction of every ship within a radius of ten miles. It is a cathode ray device which is operated by the radio signals sent out by other ships every twenty seconds. Pilots watching it know, practically by a mere glance at the chart, when and how much to change their courses.—Collier's Weekly.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the right dose of a properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It gently helps the average person's constipated bowels until nature restores their regularity.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a faculty position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer meets Prof. Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy. At the school they are struck by an air of mystery pervading the place. Gordon Haskell, proprietor, welcomes them. Wilton Payne completes the Academy faculty. In a schoolroom Janet finds a group which the teachers had supposed were scholars, are wax figures. Haskell explains unusual circumstances connected with the conduct of the Academy. Among the pupils is Berenice Bracebridge, daughter of the late owner of the school. The story of the tragedy of Lostland Academy is that of two sisters and two brothers of Berenice, who lost their lives in the water, some years ago. The wax figures were modeled in the likenesses of the four, and Doctor Bracebridge's will provided that they must be preserved. Payne learns from Berenice that an uncouth giant whom Janet had seen with Haskell is named Balder, and is a valuable servant. From Jerry Moore, the only witness of the drowning of the children, Payne learns particulars of the tragedy. He begins to take an increasing interest in Berenice, as Fleming does in Janet. Reading diaries kept by Doctor Bracebridge, Payne senses something sinister in the drowning of the children. In the belfry of the old church he finds a long discarded Christmas tree. Its presence puzzles him. Balder makes a halting explanation of its preservation.

"I am going down with Mrs. Denver."

"Why?"

"She's afraid."

Haskell gave an impatient exclamation. "How glad I'll be when Berenice attains her majority. Then we'll have no more of the wax figures. Well, let the dusting go, Mrs. Denver. Here, give me the key. Really a woman of your years should have better sense."

"You should have mentioned the figures in your letter, sir," she gave back; "unless you were afraid to mention them."

He scowled but made no answer. Payne was moving toward the library. "No, not there! Here in the drawing room."

"You don't favor the library much."

"Too many memories of my poor stepfather. What I want to say is this: Balder tells me that Berenice was talking about a Christmas tree the family had the year before the accident. Now, what started her on that?"

"Isn't it natural her mind should sometimes go back to the very early days?"

"It's just as well you should not encourage her recollections. I want her to look forward—not back!"

"With all my heart—so do I! Why is that door kept locked?" Wilton added.

"The archives of the parish are kept in a chest in that room," Haskell explained smoothly.

"Oh, well, there's every reason—"

"Yes, every reason."

The two men faced each other across the marble-topped center table; one like a study in burnt umber; the other a bold and melancholy etching in black and white. Haskell's dead-white hand pressed down against the marble, his veins as black as the veins in the stone. His ring had cut a scarlet circle about his ring finger.

"Payne," he went on, "you don't know how oppressive this ancient place is to me. I'd like to leave it to its ivy and its bats. And the ghosts of all the dead presidents could come and ring its bell if they had a mind to—Ah, Berenice, come in."

She stood in the doorway. She had changed to a black taffeta dress with many ruffles that stood out like the petals of a black rose. Wilton went away. Berenice watched him go; and her guardian, appraising her as the prettiest of sublunary girls in that quaint dress, remarked jealously: "You have brightened very much since these teachers came."

"Naturally! They have transformed the place."

"Don't get too fond of them. They will not be here forever."

"Neither shall I!"

"No—after your majority—or your—marriage, we can sell the old place; though who would buy it I don't know—unless it were some doctor to turn it into a sanatorium."

"Yes, it might make a sanatorium. You might be the doctor."

"Oh, no—nothing like that. Berenice—darling—I've hoped for just one thing during the course of these years."

She met his eyes steadily, though she knew what was coming; had known it before the ministering angels of education had appeared upon the scene. It was her acute realization of the trend of her guardian's emotions that had led, indeed, to her demanding a small corps of teachers to finish her education; together with a strong though dimly defined instinct that if any ghosts haunted the old academy it was the specter of a mystery not yet solved.

"Just one thing," he said brokenly, "your—love—the hope that some day you would be my wife."

She hesitated before she answered him. "Guardian, that can never be!"

His astonishment, his pain, was genuine. Across her mind floated the memory of a fairy tale once told her by Mother Martha, of a wolf who desired to become human. Gordon Haskell's eyes at that moment were oddly like those of a wounded animal baffled in its attempt to step from its own kingdom into another.

"You are very young, Berenice. Do not be final."

"I know that it could never be, Guardian."

"Why not?" he gasped crisply. "What is wrong with me that you cannot love me?"

"Love doesn't come at a call. You've been very good—devoted to our family—"

He stepped back a few paces, his face ashy white, his hand clutching with the old gesture of pain at his heart.

"You have an attack! Shall I bring you water?"

"Yes, hurry!"

He was sitting by the fire when she returned. After drinking the water he straightened up again and muttered, "I must avoid emotion. Don't let these young teachers make love to you, Berenice. You have money, they have none!"

She flushed with anger! "How can you imply such things, Guardian! They have been most kind to me—anyone is kind, I think, who stays in this old academy."

"They are well paid."

"People of their attainments would be well paid anywhere. I repeat—it's a kind of high sacrifice and devotion to stay here!"

He looked furtively at her. "Why?"

"Because of the wax figures, and the old sad memories. Balder says the last Christmas tree we ever had is in the belfry room. It ought to be destroyed."

"I'll tell him to burn it."

"And I should like the key to the room where the figures are."

"No, no, my dear! I know best."

Janet entered at that moment, and Berenice welcomed her warmly. "Let us go up and see Mother Martha," she proposed. "In the east wing."

Janet hesitated. "Have I your permission, Mr. Haskell?"

"Certainly," he answered, not looking at her.

Berenice led the way down the corridors—up a staircase, through one totally deserted and shut-up floor to a large room with a fireplace under the eaves. It was hung with photographs of the Bracebridge family, and on one shelf was a collection of children's toys. Before the soft-coal fire sat Mother Martha in her rocking chair, her hands in her black silk gloves, her bright shawl wound closely around her stooping shoulders.

"I've brought Janet to see you!"

"Sit you down! It's been a fine day—like the days when they were all here; I used to hear them runnin' and callin' me. The brown man's locked 'em up now."

"Just the figures, Mother Martha."

"They're yours not less, Berenice. You have your Sunday frock on!"

"Yes, Mother Martha."

The old woman searched Janet's face anxiously. "You are not taking her away?"

"No—oh, no!"

Mother Martha rocked herself in her chair, gazed at the glowing coals. Up in this high story the wind whistled as if they were in a tower. "Ain't you been up the ravine yet?"

"Yes, once."

"'Tis an awful place—a place of death."

"Yes, dear," Berenice said soothingly; "but don't think of that now. Show Janet all the things you knit so beautifully."

When they were going away Mother Martha called Janet back to her and, grasping her arm, drew her down confidentially. "He laughs at the stories they tell about this old house—but it's all gospel truth. I seen 'em—walking."

CHAPTER VI

The Welford farm was up a lonely road about two miles from the academy. Wilton Payne walked there alone, for he wanted to put his thoughts in some kind of orderly array before talking to Sally Welford on the folly of superstition. What he gradually evolved from his rather confused emotions was the theory that all superstitions are woven around some fact. They may embroider this fact to the point of fantasy, but it remains a solid center beneath the tapestry of imagination. What was the fact at Lostland academy from which people departed into the uncertain and shivery region of fears and fancies? With his best efforts, Wilton could run down but two facts of enough importance to set in motion the machinery of hauntings or of some blight that killed all joy of living in the ancient academy. One was the sudden deaths of four adored children, with the consequent illness and mental impairment of Doctor Bracebridge; the other the by-product of the first—the four wax figures.

Sally herself admitted him to the chilly hall of the farmhouse, with its striped green-and-white paper and green glass hanging lamp; and ushered him into the darkened best room and invited him to be seated on one of a set of horsehair chairs, from which he could contemplate another glass lamp in a nest of knitted wool call shells and balls; and the oval-framed photographs of the family.

"I'll call Pop," she said.

"It's you I want to see, Sally."

"Who are you?" asked Cactus Joe.

"I'm Professor Doperino, the famous hypnotist."

"The man who puts folks to sleep?"

"Yes."

"Well, stay right here and catch the next train that comes. What Crimson Gulch needs is somebody to wake it up."

TWO-PIECE FROCK HAS REAL CHARM

Pattern 1922

This is one of those tremendously chic two-piece frocks which do their stuff so quietly and subtly you have to stop and look carefully to find out where all that style really comes from. Front pleats that all turn in, are one of its clever little tricks, and pleated sleeves that grow into a devastatingly smart epaulet on the shoulders are another. The rest of it is mostly very good proportions and a demure and becoming little round collar. The original was made of red and white checked gingham and worn with navy blue accessories. It was stunning!

Pattern 1922 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 5 yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York city.

EVEN

"What's a joint account, pop?"

"It's an account where one person does the depositing and the other the withdrawing."

MODERN DANCE STEP

"What is the name of the dance Beth just did?"

"From the way she was shaking I should say it was a St. Vitus dance."

Modern Farm Knowledge

Stranger—Farm products cost more than they did a while back. How do you explain it?

Farmer—Well, when a farmer is supposed to know the botanical name of what he's raising and the entomological name of the bugs that eat it and the chemical name of the stuff that will kill the bugs—somebody's got to pay for all this knowledge, ain't they?—Pathfinder Magazine.

And Not Always Politely

"People are not nearly so formal as they used to be."

"No," said Mrs. Chuggins. "Nearly every time I go out in the car policemen to whom I have never been introduced don't hesitate to speak to me."

Poor Kid!

Old Lady—Aren't you ashamed to be seen smoking cigarettes?

Urchin—Well, wot can yer do, lady, when the ole man pinches yer pipe?—London Weekly Telegraph.

Farmers Are Deserving Of "Class" Stallions

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Our interest has been maintained for a long time in the Breeding Bureau in the state of New York. It has done a lot of good and is still doing yeoman service for the thoroughbred breeding industry. As I have pointed out a number of times in this column it is imperative that California establish a similar institution. The funds are available in the money turned over by the racing associations from a tax on the handle of the mutuel machines or the tote.

Margaret Daingerfield, not so long ago, wrote:

"Daily many inquiries are received at the office of The Jockey Club and by the Turf newspapers from breeders concerned with two important questions: 'Shall I breed my mare next spring?' and 'Where can I find a desirable thoroughbred in the vicinity of New York?' "

In answer to the first question Miss Daingerfield said, properly enough, that it is worse than folly not to breed a mare. As to the second, she pointed out there are many desirable stallions placed by the Breeding Bureau and by the Army Remount Service in various localities all over New York, the services of which can be obtained for a nominal stud fee.

Curate, a grand performer, is one of the New York stock horses that can be made use of in the breeding season by a farmer with only a mare or two. I have particular interest in Curate on account of the similarity of his blood lines to those of King Heather, my premier stallion at Heather Farm. Curate is a son of Man o' War's sire, Fair Play, from Irish Abbess, "a winning daughter of another great race horse and sire, Celt," as Miss Daingerfield says. The second dam is a daughter of Disguise, a high class race horse, winning in England the famous Jockey Club Stakes over a distance of ground. As is well known, King Heather is by Disguise, from Antrim, a daughter of Celt.

May the time be speeded when we have a few Curates in a California State Breeding Bureau.

NON-METALLIC MINERALS OF IMPORTANCE

Many Other Things Besides Gold and Silver Held To Be Of Great Value

In the present widespread and strenuous search for gold, and in the earlier province-wide scramble for base metals and silver, another great potential source of British Columbia wealth has been almost wholly overlooked, says Sidney Norman in a recent article in the Vancouver Sun.

In every direction are non-metallic minerals of great importance to industry of all kinds and which, under normal conditions of demand and energetic handling, would add to prosperity.

In addition to coal, which is a major non-metallic, the province contains important deposits of bentonite, sandstones, gypsum, iron oxides, quartz, sodium carbonate, sulphur and talc.

The diatomite deposits near Quesnel, in the Cariboo district, are classified by the Mines Branch of the Department of Mines at Ottawa as the largest known in the Dominion.

B. C. Refractories, Ltd., Vancouver, owns a large area covering much of the largest single deposit and has been shipping occasionally during past years.

Export Production

Coast Quarries, Ltd., also of Vancouver, has been testing crude diatomite mud from Burnaby Lake in the outskirts of the city. While experiments in making a commercial filter-aid were not successful, it is believed the calcined material may be found useful for other purposes.

G. H. Turner, of Vancouver, also owns large deposits at Quesnel and during this year has been making occasional shipments to the city for local use in house insulation.

In 1933 production in all of Canada was 1809 tons, of which about 95 per cent was exported to the United States, Imports in the same year are estimated at 4000 tons, of which ten per cent came from Soviet Russia and the balance from California, where the deposits are of marine deposition and therefore better suited to filteration use.

The provincial deposits are uniformly of fresh water deposition, so far as now known, and best suited for polishing and insulation and for the manufacture of light brick and tile and paints.

Price Is Favorable

According to government reports, the present price of diatomite in Canada varies from $25 to $35 a ton for concrete admixture; $35 to $75 for insulation and filteration, and up to $200 in small lots for material suitable for polishes. Imported insulation bricks vary from $110 to $140 per 1000, according to grade and quality.

Under these price conditions, it seems reasonable to expect development of an important industry within the province when industry regains its normal stride.

The Quesnel product has been used for some years by B. C. Refractories for admixture with concrete, one of the larger buildings in which it was used being the General Hospital.

What Is Diatomite

Diatomaceous Earth is a friable earthly deposit composed of nearly pure silica consisting essentially of the skeletons of microscopic aquatic plants called diatoms. This is commercially spoken of as kieselguhr, the German name for it

This material is not well known, but there are many uses for it. Ottawa recently announced that the National Research Council had discovered a new use, viz., that the earth deposits at Quesnel, B. C., have been found suitable for the manufacture of diatomite bricks—a porous, heat-resistant brick used to line blast furnaces.

Bricks made out of Quesnel earth have been proved, under test, to be practically as good as the output of diatomite brick plants in California, Algeria and the Island of Moler in Europe.

Uses Are Many

Other uses are as follows:

1. As a filtration powder for raw cane sugar solutions; sugar beet extracts; syrups, molasses, glucose, lactose, maltose; lard, cottonseed oil, corn oil, fish oil, linseed oil, castor oil, used transformer oil, used crank-case oil; petroleum, petroleum water emulsions, etc., lemon juice, orange juice, citric acid, pectin, vinegar, grape juice: nitro-cellulose, sewage, adhesives; alcoholic extracts, anti-toxins, and serums, beverages, dyestuffs, glycerine, liquid soap, C. P. Chemicals.

2. Thermal insulation for furnaces, stoves, ice boxes, dwellings, hot blast stoves, boilers, breechings, enamelling ovens, furnace doors, electric furnaces, oil stills, marine boilers, high pressure steam lines, safes and tempering steel.

3. As a source of silica for ultramarine blue, for some water gless, as an addition to plaster and Portland cement and enamels.

As An Abrasive

4. As an abrasive for soaps, cleansing powders, silver polishes, and compositions for polishing lacquered automobiles.

5. As an absorbent for nitroglycerine in dynamite (absorbing about three times its weight), bromine, sulphuric acid, alcohol, liquid fuels, liquid manures and liquid air explosives.

6. As a filler for rubber, asphalt, sulphur, paints, insecticides, papier mache, phonograph records.

7. In miscellaneous uses for sound insulation, as a support for catalysts, and in moulding sand.

8. The breaking of oil emulsions, separation of paraffin wax from chilled petroleum, etc.

In 1918, a ship called the "Atlantus," was launched, having been constructed of concreate containing admixed diatomaceous earth.

Quesnel Deposits Compact

The Quesnel deposits occur as solid, compact, cream-colored beds up to 60 feet in thickness and in places 600 feet above the rivers. Many outcrops have been found between Alexandria (20 miles south of Quesnel), and 20 miles north of Quesnel, which is the present terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. The beds are exposed in landslides and in the steep banks of the river and creeks that have cut their way through the Fraser plateau.

With such huge deposits and so many uses, it would appear that one of our natural resources would give much employment and be a large revenue producer for the province but we find on investigation that attempts to work the deposits have been spasmodic and not very successful.

The Turner deposit consists of eight claims, some 400 acres, taken up under the Mineral Act. All the assessment work has been done for four years and duly recorded. The deposit is about 150 feet thick, resembling kaolin , or china clay.

A layer at a still lower elevation is yellow ochre. Between this deposit and the river is a bed of schist with iron pyrites carrying gold values. There is a grinding plant on the ground.

The poor roads into the district are a great handicap to the working of these properties and it looks as if another of British Columbia's natural resources is lying dormant awaiting advent of someone with sufficient courage and capital to prosecute it to a successful issue.

FATHERS' COUNCIL IN WELFARE WORK

Fathers' Council, Turnbull P.T.A., San Mateo, are sponsoring a benefit dance at the San Mateo Junior college gymnasium on Second avenue, Saturday evening, October 6.

Proceeds will be used in child welfare work. Tickets are on sale by P.T.A. members and at the Blue Bird Drug stores, San Mateo and Burlingame.

Music will be furnished by Walter Wood's Dance Orchestra. Mr. Wood formerly broadscasted over K P O with Cy Trobbe and at one time led a dance orchestra around the world.

Gilbert Green, violinist, of Redwood City, played over the NBC network two and one-half years. He now leads the SERA orchestra of San Mateo county.

The saxophone players, Eddie Burns and Earl Gordon, are known in radio circles and as popular players at dances. Lew Miller, pianist, plays at large hotel dances in San Francisco.

Specialty and vaudeville numbers are included in the program to entertain non-dancers.

Oil Fire Hazard

Acclumations of grease, road oil, and dirt on the motor and chassis should be removed at least every six months, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Many instances of cars catching fire through backfiring are attributable to grease and oil accumulations.

COLUMN OF N. R. A. FACTS

INFORMATION regarding the N. R. A. will be furnished each week by W. H. CLAY, Chairman of the local N. R. A. Publicity Committee.

To encourage the conspicuous display of the Blue Eagle, the National Recovery Administration has prepared a beautiful lithographed poster in three colors, which is available to all concerns and individuals operating under NRA codes and possessing the Blue Eagle Code cards. These posters, designed by Charles Coiner, who sketched the original Blue Eagle, lend themselves particularly to attractive window advertising displays.

They show the Blue Eagle resplendent against a background of red, white and blue, with the legend: "We operate under an approved code and display the Blue Eagle as a symbol of co-operation."

Businessmen, who have found that conspicuous display of the Blue Eagle, has played a prominent part in the nation's progress towards recovery, are evincing great enthusiasm over the NRA poster. Demands for the posters are pouring in to the offices of local NRA Committees, and it is anticipated that their display will soon compare favorably, with the spontaneous showing of the original Blue Eagle, when it was first released to the country, a little more than a year ago.

There is only one requirement for securing the poster. Each firm or individual requesting one, must have a Code Eagle.

Retail stores will find that the new poster will attract attention to their show windows. The artist, has done such a remarkable job, that the lithographs are being placed in frames by many stores, so as to protect them from becoming soiled.

Posters may be secured in Daly City, by applying to W. H. Clay at 15 Quadalupe Street.

General Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator, has stressed time and again, the importance of showing the Blue Eagle. He has said that mere compliance with code requirements is not enough. He has urged the consumers throughout the country, to look for the Blue Eagle at all places of business, and if it is not shown to inquire why.

We urge the business man and the business firm to make as extensive use of the Blue Eagle as they possibly can. If you possess the Code Eagle card, you may use the reproduction of the Blue Eagle in your general advertising, on delivery trucks, on wrappers for packages, and even on merchandise itself.

The most striking display that you can make of the Blue Eagle, so far as show windows are concerned is through the medium of the new lithographed poster. Everyone who sees it wants it. Everyone who is entitled to one, can secure one.

Don't wait until the other fellow has attracted favorable attention to his store or place of business by displaying the Blue Eagle poster.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

New Consumer Emblem Available: In response to numberless requests for a 1934 Consumer's Emblem to symbolize co-operation with NRA codes, an atractive small sticker has been prepared for display in homes, on automobile windows where permissible, etc. These emblems may be obtained by writing or telephoning to the Local NRA Committee in your town or city. Last year, 60 million consumers signed pledges of co-operation with the President's Re-employment Agreement. The 1934 pledge reaffirms: "In the national effort to bring security to all, I will encourage and patronize those business establishments in which the Blue Eagle of NRA Codes is displayed."

Bank Failures At New Low: Bank deposits have increased by four and a half billion dollars and at no time in the history of the country has the number of bank failures been so small as during the past year, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has reported to the President. "Only five small insured banks have failed. The Corporation made funds available to pay the depositors of these banks within ten days after the appointment of the receiver. This has reduced the distress caused by these bank failures to a negligible amount." The Corporation now insures fifty million accounts up to a maximum of $5,000. The plan fully protects 97 out of every 100 depositors.

The Business Front: Business failures in the in the United States for August 1934, were fewer than for any other month in the past fourteen years. In August 1932, there were 2796 failures involving over $77,000,000. In August, 1933, there were 1472 failures involving over $42,000,000. This August, the number of failures dropped to 929, involving about $18,000,000. (Dun and Bradstreet.) The value of department store sales for August of this year increased considerably over both June and July, 1934—the index figure rising to 79 per cent of the 1923-25 average compared with 74 per cent in June and 73 per cent in July. (Feral Reserve Bd.)

How Workers Spend Their Leisure: One of the greatest benefits NRA's shorter work-week has provided is the improvement in the health of women workers, according to Mary Anderson, head of the Women's Bureau of the Department of Labor. Miss Anderson illustrates specifically by telling the story of one woman who for twenty years, from the time she was fourteen, had worked in factories for fifty-four or fifty-six hours a week. When the code for her industry was adopted, her working time was reduced to forty hours. In three months, this worker gained twenty pounds. "I never had so much time to rest before," was how she explained it.

Canned Food Standards: As a condition of approval of the canning industry code, the President required that a committee be appointed to study and recommend standards, grades and lables of caned foods for inclusion in the Code. This was opposed at first by many canners who declared that any changes in the old system would be impraticable. Now, however, the industry has definitely committed itself to the development of a comprehensive system of descriptive labelling. Separate committees are being appointed to draft these requirements for important food products and the next month will be devoted to preparing recommendations to the President.

Temporary C. A. For Retail Fuel Code: A General Code Authority was recently created to supervise the operation of "basic" codes in those industries which do not require Code Authorities of their own. This group has now been placed in charge of the retail solid fuel code. It will function until the industry can elect a new Code Authority to take the place of the old one which resigned recently because NRA required that minimum prices could not become effective until submitted to headquarters for review in the consumer's interest. The General Code Authority is headed by Dr. Willard Hotchkiss, president of the Armour Institute of Technology. Other members include Father Francis J. Haas, of the Labor Advisory Board; Stacy May, of the Consumers' Advisory Board; deLancey Kountze of the Industrial Advisory Board.

A Break For Vaudevillians: Performers appearing in movie theaters must be paid at least the code minimum of $7.50 a day, regardless of the number of performances they give, NRA has just ruled. The Motion Picture Code, while providing this minimum, says nothing about the number of performances, and the Code Authority reported that in some cases, actors were being paid per performance or were appearing in more than one theater a day and receiving less than the minimum. Futhermore NRA ruled if actors play in more than one theater per day, the minimum rate must be paid by each theater.

OLD HISTORICAL DATA OF THE COLMA VALLEY

(By An Old-Timer)

Incidents of Pioneer Days and Characters Recalled For Our Readers

The citizens of all this Colma Valley area naturally have a loyal pride in its early history that will be found of especial interest at the present time because of our superior growing importance as a suburb of the great city of San Francisco.

The earliest settlers, who from 1853 to 1860 evinced their faith in the coming importance and value of the Colma Valley, entered the government lands as homesteaders, the names of whom we glean from a historical sketch written by the late R. S. Thornton and published in the Record of May 27, 1909, viz: Charles Clark, James S. Clark, John W. Locker, A. D. Willard, J. E. King, J. E. Clebey, A. J. Van Winkle, Mary Dingman (widow), I. G. Knowles, M. Hollinsworth, Franklin White, S. S. White, B. S. Green Sr., Michel Comeford, Robert Patton, William Burley Sr., Edward Robson, A. S. Easton, Jeremiah Smith, Herman Duncks, liam T. Pierce, Owen McMahon, Patrick Brooks, James T. Casey Sr., John Gardner and R. S. Thornton.

Peace and happiness reigned supreme until 1859, when a gang of corporation engineers encroached on the rights of these settlers. They pretended that these lands belonged to the La Guna Merced Rancho, an almost worthless waste of desolation at that time, while the settlers had cultivated their lands and had fine crops on almost every acre, all fenced and good, respectable looking houses, barns and other good improvements.

There ensued a long legal battle, as all these homesteaders had patents to their lands from the United States land office.

R. S. Thornton was selected to go to Washington to guard their rights and, after several years, through his untiring efforts, he was successful in establishing the settlers' claims and have them substantially guaranteed.

The descendants of these earlier pioneers, who have all passed away, are among the most respected citizens of the Colma Valley.

Owing to a touch of muscular rheumatism that has incapacitated ye Old Timer, the Record readers will please excuse discrepancies. I promise to do my best while indisposed to not abandon the job entirely, because there is a vast amount of interesting events of twenty-five years ago.

Race of Some Culture Evolved Stone Hammer

New evidence that the first clear distinction of modern mankind was the use of stone hammers instead of the stone knives and spearheads preferred by their ancient rivals, the Neanderthal ogre-men, now entirely exterminated, was reported in a recent address to the Royal Anthropological institute, in London, by Dr. L. S. B. Leakey, known for his discoveries of ancient human remains in east Africa now acknowledged to be the oldest bones of the modern type of man yet discovered, according to the Baltimore Sun.

These African finds confirm the theory that men of modern type lived in the world for thousands of years side by side with the squat, brutish and perhaps cannibalistic Neanderthal race, dim memories of which may be responsible for the world-wide tales of man-eating ogres. One physical difference between the two species seems to have been that the Neanderthals always had thick bony ridges just above their eyes, giving them a kind of perpetual frown but probably designed by nature merely to protect their eyes from injuries by blows.

Man and Mirror

Men have a penchant for sneering at the vanity of women and cite the fatal fascination a mirror holds for them. But did you ever see a man pass up a mirror? And did you ever study his maneuvers? If he thinks he's alone he'll give his visage the once over and register complete approval of the reflection. But if there is anyone around, he behaves in a thoroughly masculine manner. If he isn't making ostentatious efforts to straighten his cravat, he's touching a portion of his face gingerly with a finger, pretending he is studying a cut inflicted while shaving. Which ought to prove that women are more honest than men.—New York Sun.

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY by Vance Wynn © Public Ledger

"So Perish All Traitors"

THE two young men who registered at the Southern hotel, in St. Louis, many years ago, were well dressed and looked prosperous.

Also they seemed to be devoted friends.

Charles A. Preller and Walter L. Maxwell were the names they inscribed on the book, and it later developed that they were Englishmen, having come from Liverpool to Boston and thence to St. Louis.

At all events they were inseparable companions, and their mutual devotion attracted the attention of the other guests of the house.

Maxwell left the hotel first, saying that his friend intended staying a few days longer.

Also he suggested that he had some work to do in his room and did not want to be disturbed.

That was all very well, but when Preller failed to make his appearance after two days the management of the house thought it was time to investigate.

There was no response to the knock on his room door and it had to be forced.

There was a trunk in the corner of the apartment.

It was opened and in it was found the dead body of Charles A. Preller.

His mustache had been removed, probably to change his appearance, and on his clothing was pinned a sheet of paper on which was written:

"So perish all traitors to the great cause."

The first and most natural move on the part of the detectives was to try and find the former companion of the dead man.

There was no special reason for suspecting that he had killed the friend to whom he seemed so devoted, but there was every reason for supposing that he might throw some light on the tragedy.

Did the two men belong to some secret society?

Were they being pursued by avengers?

It was not easy to get on the track of Maxwell, but it was eventually learned that he had gone to San Francisco.

The chief of police of that city worked in unison with the chief of police of St. Louis.

In a few days he was able to report that a man who looked very much like the description of Maxwell had been seen in the smoking room of the Palace hotel.

Inquiry showed that this man had registered as T. C. D'Auger, of Paris.

He talked with a French accent, although one day, in answering a question suddenly asked by another guest, he spoke perfect English.

Just when the police were planning to place him under arrest he left San Francisco for New Zealand.

He was captured there, but resisted extradition.

He seemed to have plenty of money and legal advice, but eventually the papers were signed by President Cleveland and the suspect was brought back to St. Louis.

For up to the time there was no convincing legal proof that he had killed Preller.

He denied the charge vehemently and defied the authorities.

But the police got to work and in the course of time they proved a number of things.

First it was shown that the handwriting on the note which was pinned to the clothing of the corpse in the trunk was that of Maxwell.

It corresponded exactly with the signature he had placed on the hotel register.

That demolished the theory that Preller had been the victim of the vengeance of some secret society. It was simply an ingenious idea of Maxwell to send the police on a false scent.

Secondly, they proved that Maxwell had gone to a barber shop after leaving the Southern hotel and had his beard taken off, and that after it had been done he turned to the barber and said:

"Do you think any one would recognize me now?"

Thirdly, they proved that he had purchased the trunk in which the body was found.

They produced the porter who had carried it to his room, and they had evidence that he displayed a big roll of hundred-dollar bills shortly after leaving the hotel.

This furnished the motive for the crime—the cold-blooded, calculated robbery of the man who had been his generous friend.

At the trial he was confronted by the druggist from whom he had purchased the chloroform which he had used to overcome Preller before murdering him.

There were no mitigating circumstances whatever, and the jury rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree.

Walks, Saves Postage

Walking 400 miles from London to Aberdeen, Scotland, to get his uniform and thus save the cost of postage, Guardsman Albert Lorrimer of the First Battalion Scots Guards, wound up by facing a court martial. He was charged with absenting himself from duty for five weeks. Lorrimer pleaded that when he reached home he found his grandmother dying and his father and brothers out of work, so he returned to London to hunt a job.

Tailored Ensemble Is Ultra Chic

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUITS are the foremost message for fall. The keynote to the suit mode is sounded in two words, variety and fabric. Which is to say that every type of suit or ensemble is represented that fancy may picture with emphasis placed on the handsomeness and novelty of the materials employed.

The new suit and tailored ensembles are that varied they include styles in every mood and tempo featuring coats and jackets all the way from seven-eighth to waistlength. As to silhouette they go from one extreme to another, from loose swagger styles to the neat and trim flared front basques which Schiaparelli creates so successfully, to which add all the variations between that key to individual preference. As to modish suit skirts they are straight and narrow, often slit at the hemline.

Speaking of materials, the tailored ensembles in the picture tell a story of high-style, quality-kind fabrics most eloquently. For street, campus or general daytime wear throughout autumn, these plaided and checked tailleurs are correct and smart to the Nth degree. So far as their rich vibrant color schemes are concerned they blend into the autumn landscape superbly.

Each of these models is fashioned of a soft-textured lightweight rabbit, woolen fabric, which while it looks the part of luxury is in reality quite moderately priced. The fine fur woven into these suitings gives extra warmth for chilly days, which together with their attractive appearance make these weaves of pronounced appeal to fashion-wise seekers of superior materials.

At the right, in the picture, one of the new monotone shadow plaids in carioca red is used on the diagonal for the skirt of the one-piece frock and on vertical lines for the three-quarter coat. The bias sleeves correspond to the skirt treatment. A full scarf of brown velveteen lined with crepe in the red shade of the suit together with a belt in the same brown velvet lends smart contrast.

At the left, a coat cut with mannish lapels is made of a broken-checked rabbit woolen in old gold and brown, the same topping a gown of the identical material. The frock has a high turndown collar and a knotted tie of self-fabric. The rather wide belt is in brown leather with large decorative buckle.

One of the interesting highlights in the street and sports realm is what is referred to as the "purpose" suit. The idea is to assemble all of the same material, a jacket suit plus a full-length topcoat sometimes adding a fourth piece, perhaps one of the new jacket blouses or a shirtwaist effect with buttons down the front. Herein is constituted an entire wardrobe for daytime wear.

A vogue which is much in evidence this fall is the gay novelty-plaided or checked skirt which is worn with a dark solid colored top. The brown and yellow check which fashions the costume to the left would make up strikingly in one of the very new narrow, slim and slit-at-the-hemline skirts. Top this with a swanky brown velveteen or corduroy jacket-blouse (newer than a tuck-in) and this twosome will rank among the smartest of the season.

WIDE BELTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Belts are growing wider and wider. The broad suede belt fastening with a composition arrow which graces this good-looking dress is typical of the new trend toward wide, wider, widest belted effects. This classically simple but very new campus frock is made of a lightweight two-tone rabbit woolen fabric. The high, wide-extending from side-to-side youthful and flattering neckline is the Ahx idea.

Frogskin Shoes

Shoes of frogskin are the latest craze in Paris, and the feminine followers of fashion are taking to them.

MODISTES TAKE TO SCHOOLGIRL STYLES

"That simple little shirtwaist dress" may appear this season in anything from satin to sequins.

The knowing designers have discovered that it's highly amusing to present innocent, schoolgirlish styles in the most sophisticated and luxurious fabrics.

And women have discovered that their vampire voltage goes up at least 100 per cent when they wear seemingly ingenuous frocks in wicked materials.

It's the old principle of the excessively feminine girl who knows that her dimpled charms are heightened to the masculine eye by severely tailored lines. She is completely aware that her attempt at mannish clothes merely makes the obtuse male chuckle.

Satin With Feather Capes Will Be Worn This Autumn

Satin with feather capes will again be worn this autumn by the very smartest women, for they consider this fashion both chic and flattering, as well as allowing for lovely color contrasts.

Thus a frock of deep purplish-blue satin appears under a cape of soft green feathers and a pink satin frock allies itself with a cape of cornflower blue feathers. Another dress of pale satin is worn with a cape made of smoky gray feathers.

A black satin dress, cut on sheath lines is worn with a collar-like capelet of matching black satin edged with black heron feathers. All signs point to this fashion continuing for some time longer, until the really heavy formal evening wraps of velvet, lame and fine fur are seen.

Flexible Handbags

Bags for fall are soft, flexible things, many of them made without rigid frames. They are all shapes and sizes, from Schiaparelli's novel five-sided bag with inverted plaits to Molyneux's oblong, underarm model

HARD TO CROWD DAN CUPID OUT

HELEN WELSHIMER, in the New York World-Telegram.

Love makes the world go round, they say. If it doesn't act as chief motivating force it certainly contributes to the speed of the whirligig. Of course, synthetic values pass often for the guaranteed product. But it all comes under the same head.

Let's look at a newspaper for a recent day.

There was the story of the girls, ages from twelve to eighteen, in the reformatory at Rakospalota. The girls had soldier sweethearts. They weren't allowed to see them. So the maidens swallowed toothbrushes, teaspoons and articles of assorted sizes. Some are reported dying.

Puppy love, of course, but just the same a divine enchantment that made a captive maid swallow more than a lump in her throat because she couldn't have her soldier's kiss!

Age knows the allure of a romantic pick-me-up, too. A ninety-two-year-old Moslem farmer living near Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, couldn't resist the attraction of an eighty-one-year-old woman. But the bride's family —for she got to be a bride—said no, if she married it must be a man nearer her age. The couple eloped and lived in Elysium for three days. Then the romance faded, and the bridegroom, who was too old for the bride anyway (so her family had said), deserted the woman. Anyway, she had had three days in her precarious heaven.

Down in Alcoa, Tenn., more than 200 men still in the plants of the Aluminum Company of America have discovered that the strike pickets at the gate are using love as an allure to bring them out. The pickets are holding up pictures of pretty girls. The men inside have wives and sweethearts. Therefore, it is thought that a desire for feminine companionship may lure the men from the plants.

Lysistrata stopped a war, you know, by locking the women up and keeping the men out until the soldiers promised to stop fighting. Maybe the pickets will win, too.

There are breach-of-promise suits, alienation of affection suits, weddings, betrothals, divorces, in the examined newspaper. An heiress has married a truck driver. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have had a friendly tete-a-tete. Eva Coo, on trial for murder, has heard an ex-suitor testify. Oh, you can't get away from love! Or one of its by-products! It's all in the paper.

Hitler and Mussolini, robberies and the forest fires and the Chinese drowned in the floods do not constitute most of our news. It's love that keeps the printing press fed!

Sex, independent of love, has its columns, too. British women have won male jobs, that same day's paper announces. There are now 347 women blacksmiths in Britain. Amy Molliston has been given the honor of being the first airwoman ever employed as a pilot on the regular cross-channel service, a London dispatch asserts.

And oh yes, there are the birth columns! Hungary has rewarded one of its peasants because she had more children than any other woman in the nation.

She has had twenty-one children. There are 6,000 other Hungarian mothers whose average families are thirteen and one-third children. They received gold medals. That, too, we would classify as a love story.

It takes the grand emotion, be it sturdy or fluctuating, adolescent or senile, to keep the world going around in circles!

Atlantic Icebergs

The iceberg count of the North Atlantic varies considerably from year to year. In 1912, there were 1,100; in 1924 only 11; and this year about 700. They generally disappear in the Gulf Stream. The waters of the stream have been known to melt a berg the size of a city block within 36 hours.

Marvelous Human Eye, According to Novelist

Unless you read the best-seller novels or the so-called fiction in the magazines, you can never know the great number of stunts the human eye is capable of doing. Here are a few specimens:

Her eyes roamed carelessly around the room.

With her eyes she riveted him to the spot.

He withdrew his eyes from her face and they fell to the floor at her feet.

He drank her in with dancing eyes.

Their eyes met for a long breathless moment and swam together.

Marjorie would often remove her eyes from the deck and cast them far out to sea.

He dropped his eyes, and a look of intense pain came over his face.

His eyes met hers, and then fell.

Their eyes clashed and John uttered a shriek.

Her eyes rose from the table under the spell of his commanding voice.

ATTENTION TO BRAKES AIM OF SAFETY EFFORT

Check your brakes for safety in driving during the approaching winter months.

This message to motorists will be widely spread this month by the Public Safety Department of the California State Automobile Association. With approach of the rainy season the motorists organization has chosen the subject of good brakes for a program of educational activities to extend throughout October.

"Inadequate or faulty brakes are responsible for more traffic accidents than any other mechanical feature of the car," declares a statement announcing the effort. "Regardless of the care and caution exercised by a driver he must have the mechanical means of controlling his car in order to drive in safety. Without good brakes a motorist is helpless in the face of danger and the car he operates becomes a definate menace to all in its path."

An average of one-half second elapses between the time a motorist decides to apply his brakes and when he actually does so, according to retime a car driven at only thirty miles cent tests. During the half-second's per hour will travel about 22 feet.

Most cars with good four-wheel brakes require fifty feet in which to stop when traveling at thirty miles per hour. Adding the distance for the half-second interval between decision and action on the part of the driver, this makes a total of seventy-two feet before the car is brought to a stop. With brakes of less than normal efficiency this stopping distance is greatly increased.

The California Vehicle Act contains specific requirements as to legal brake standards. The law requires that all vehicles must be able to stop within a distance of 37 feet when being driven at a speed of 20 miles per hour; 20.8 feet when travaling at 15 miles per hour; and 9.3 feet when the speed is 10 miles per hour.

Good Means of Checking

Making the task of filling the battery with water a periodic one has another virtue than that of increasing the life of the unit itself, remarks L. G. Evans, director of roadside service of the National Automobile Club. The motorist who fails to do this regularly never knows the extent to which corrosion is eating the terminals.

The result often is a short circuit which may do serious damage to the whole electrical system. It is not unusual at least, if perhaps not common, to find the motorist who is careless in this respect laying out money for a new generator or other expensiveunit that might have been saved.

WHAT TOWNSEND PLAN PROPOSES

First the immediate restoration of prosperity to all the people. Our depression does not come because of the lack of commodities or foodstuffs, of these we have an over supply, but because of a lack of some medium of exchange. This pension plan proposes to stimulate the circulation of our money by injecting into the veins of industry approximately two billion dollars through the aged citizens of this country in the form of $200.00 pensions for each person that is 60 years of age or over. The Townsend pension plan demands a pension of $200.00 per month to be paid to all citizens whose lives have been free of habitual criminality, if they wish to apply for it, providing they agree under oath to retire from any paid position, giving up their place to a younger person, and agreeing to spend the entire amount of the pension within a period of thirty days from the time he or she receives it. With this large expenditure each month by these old people you can readily see how buying power will be greatly increased, how industry will be again put back to a normalcy of production, and thereby putting the unemployed back to work.

A demand will be made on Congress, backed up by the signatures of millions of citizens, to pass a law immediately permitting all citizens native or naturalized, to apply for and receive the pension on the proper qualification, without strings attached, other than that they must spend the entire amout within the thirty days for commodities or services, within the United States.

It is proposed that this money will be raised by creating a National Sales Law on all commodities amounting to approzimately ten per cent nobody will be able to exchange this equitable tax because it will be hidden into the cost of commodities, just as the overhead is added in all business, and those that purchase will not even realize they are paying this tax.

The poor mans commodities will bear a much lower tax than that of the luxurious commodities of the rich.

The buying power of the nation will be suddenly restored and the disastrous effects of the labor market will be relieved, there should be an immediate rise in wages to a point comparable to the retirement pay of the aged. Thus a high state of prosperity will be made general and fully stablized.

MINING NOTES OF VARIOUS SECTIONS

J. T. Boyd, representing the Gold Fields Developement Company with main offices in Placerville has taken a lease on the Hines-Gilbert Mine near the Sliger on the Middle Fork of the American River.

The mine, one of the most valuable on the North Side and with a heavy production record in the past, belongs to an old company which has not operated for some years. It was leased this week by Mrs. Ellemerie Morgan of Grenwood, under an option, and she, in turn, subleased it to Boyd's company.

Boyd and his associates are opering the Union Mine, near El Dorado working a force of over fifty men. About $50,000 has already been spent on that property, including the cost of special pumping equipment to unwater the old time producer. The company also holds options on several other large properties in the county for possible future developement.

West American Consolidated Mines, operating the Amador Star, Bay Etate and Excelsior gold properties near Plymouth, has announced plans for a larger mill and extensive development of its holdings. The mines, adjacent to the historic Plymouth, are to be developed to greater depth, new territory opened, and prospecting of promising ground vigorously pressed.

A five-foot ledge of rich ore was recently uncovered on the 500-foot level of the Amador Star, and is reported developing favorably as drifting advances. Powerful equipment has ben placed on the Bay State Mine, where a large tonnage of commercial ore is said to have been left by former operators.

The latest mining development near Jackson is the reopening of the Sunset Mine, three miles southwest of Martell, by New York capital. Development will be commenced when the shaft, which is 750 feet deep, is unwatered. The company, with J. W. Killinger as vice president in charge, plans to open the property on a large scale.

The Sunset Mine was worked fifty years ago but had lain idle a long time until reopened by John Ratto of Suter Creek in 1922 and later worked by the Sierra Metals Corporation. When the mine was closed down a considerable amount of promising ore remained and indications pointed to a good producer.

The California-Sierra Gold Mines, Inc., a California corporation, has been organized to take over the assets and liabilities of the West Mines Corporation of Nevada City, operators of the Canada Hill, Hussey and Ragon Mines and the Queen Lil mill near Nevada City.

The same officers will manage the new company: Orlando McCraney of Nevada City is the president and manager; Gordon M. Bettles of Nevada City is the vice president; H. J. Richardson of Oakland is secretary-treasurer, and C. P. Goemmer and J. A. Steele, both of Oakland, are directors.

The new company is planning an extensive development program in Nevada County and will have at least two of the properties under active development within two weeks.

The Canyon Placers, Inc., of Dedrick, which spent $250,000 in and around this town building flumes, syphons, ditches, a 1,000,000-gallon reservoir, a dwelling and office buildings since August, 1933, is reported to be planning to recommence operations. The work was halted some months ago.

The operations a year ago constituted the largest scale mining acttivity in Trinity County at the time.

Sinking on the main shaft of the old Pennsylvania Mine at Browns Valley, a formerly famous producer that had been abandoned for more than thirty years, has progressed past the 200-foot level.

H. W. Whiting, engineer, said one new ore body has been encountered, with values of $12 a ton. A better ore body at the 500-foot level is expected.

* * *

A small crew is working on the Honeycomb Mine, near Camptonville. It is expected the mine will be in operation shortly. Frank Pendola is moving a five-stamp mill to the mine from Willow Creek.

* * *

Frank Fabian has set up a modern gravel washing plant in his back yard at Columbia. He has a crew working three shifts. The deposit is extensive and good values are reported.

DALY CITY THEATER STAGES FINE SHOW

'May I hold you to my heart?", words from one of the hit tunes in Bing Crosby's Paramount Picture "We're Not Dressing," which comes on Sunday to the Daly City Theater, is what he's singing to Carole Lombard—and suiting the action to the words.

During the production of Bing Crosby's newest Paramount film, "We're Not Dressing," which plays Sunday, and Monday, at the Daly City Theater, Hollywood discovered that professional stooges were not limited to human beings, but existed in the animal kingdom, as well.

sequences in the picture, he soon learned that he had to take his playmate "Blackie" along. For wherever Brownie went, Blackie had to go, the two cubs being inseparable since birth.

Carole Lombard, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Ethel Merman and Leon Errol are featured in "We're Not Dressing," which is a fast-paced combination of melody and fun on a South Seas island.
